Ready for Invasion

THE myriads of American and Allied troops who are to invade Europe from England, we are assured here at home, are ready,

We know from the communiques describing Allied operations in the air that the aviation arm is ready-indeed is striking with force which amounts to acrial invasion of Europe in advance of the gigantic amphibious operation which will open a western front on the con-

The navy is ready. The thousands of specialists who back up the fighting branches, the services of supply, the intricate communications systems, the complex organization of the general staff and the vitally affected areas of England-all these are ready.

The Germans have been at great pains to assure themselves and the Allies that they are ready, too. They say the great event is now imminent, a matter of weeks at the most, only days at the least. Rarely in history has the setting for an historic event been occased so deliberately, with so much knowledge of franspiring events.

But it is evident, nevertheless, that no one can know whether he is ready for the climax until it occurs. That is the issue of the battlewhether the Allies are better prepared to invade Europe than the Germans are to resist invasion. Both sides are confident, but one side must be wrong. The outcome may hang in the balance a long time before it emerges as an event in history. The morale of the nations affected will be given its severest test during the period of suspense.

Here in this country-and even more so in England, which lies in the battle area-preparedness for invasion demands complete faith in the skill and courage of the fighting forces. It demands an intensification of effort in every detail of the tremendous effort of total war, not just physical effort but the mental effort which furnishes needed stimulus for every great endeavor. We must find within ourselves the counterpart of the surpassing courage which enabled the Russians to turn back the enemy at Stolingrad, 'The victory that fighing men hope to grain on the beaches and, later, in the land offensive to liberate the occupied countries must become the victory of their countrymen, wherever they are doing their small and great parts in the war effort. For every German civilian standing behind Hitler's fighting forces there must be an American and a British civilian doing just a little better.

When we have done that, each according to his best ability, we will have earned the success we hope to achieve.

Action in Art

THE 50th anniversary of the motion picture does not deserve to be slighted. Thomas A. Edison's kinetoscope, which finally made the whole thing possible this month in the year 1894, put acilon in art and opened new vistas of expression. It gave us the good, bad and indifferent results of every great new iden; only too much familiarity with the medium today makes it difficult sometimes to understand what a tremendous impact it has had on the habits and tendencies of the last half

It is not slighting the great progress made in the mechanics of motion pictures since 1894 to say that the greatest potentialities of the new medium still lie in the future. Occasionally, they are approached. More occasionally, they are only visualized and thereafter compromised with the means and the needs at hand. The tremendous commercial foundation built under motion pictures has assured their stability, while at the same time restricting some of the flexibility which is their most valuable charac-

The future is as unlimited as it was in 1894. There is literally nothing that motion pictures cannot do, from making historical records to providing cheap entertainment for the masses. They are a tool of all purposes, to be used as men's imagination, consciences and needs dictate. If they seem in the first 50 years to have risen to a high plateau, surely in the next 50 years that judgment will be as false as was the judgment in 1894 when Mr. Edison's clever little gadget for making pictures move made a novelty for the peep show trade.

No civilian authority will take the risk of going against judgment of the generals and admirals who hear the responsibility of who bear the responsibility of winning the war. Civilians will register objections and raise points of difference, but in the showdown it is the fighting services which will get what they

Spare Parts

If you can imagine a sailor stuck with a rowboat and no cars. you can appreciate a soldier at the front without spare parts for his fighting equipment.

Providing spare parts in the quantities needed to satisfy the demands of "triphibian" warfare -l. e. land, sea and air fightingoccupies a large share of the nutomative industry's war production efforts. For every piece of war equipment delivered to the nervices a pre-established number of replacement parts-calculated on what it takes to maintain 100 units in the field for one year-go from automotive plants to army storage depots. It is estimated that 17,000 separate parts are delivered for new super bombers. One aircraft engine manufactuer reports that 40 per cent of total production goes for spares.

Ordinarily, spare parts are shipped by automobile companies local army storage deputs, where they are redistributed as orders come in from camps in this country and battle fronts over-

Not long ago the bomber factory of one automotive company received a rush order from Mediterranean base for flexo shafts, vital unit in the operation of an airplane's automatic Preparations were being made for a large scale raid on German-held Italian city, and it was essential to get as many planes as possible into the air. Three days after the carefully boxed parts had been toaded into an army airplane at a field adjucent to the factory, the units had been installed on the ground-

The navy wants 3,700,000 -- 2,000,000 overseas, 1,700,000 at home.

Meanwhile, three will be approximately, 50,000,000 civilians at work in the United States. Of this record total, 16,000,000 are fac-tory workers. Probably not more than 10,000,000 of the 16,000,000. factory workers will be in war production, however.

The fighting services, which sometimes are charged with wasting power, retart that the real waste of manpower is in civilian working ranks. They can point out that millions of farmers, for instance, produce only a little more than enough to feed themselves and would be more efficiently enpaged in wartime doing something directly related to the war effort.

Military spokesmen point out cases of excessively large labor forces in certain plants in certain industries. They can recall that last October the senate's Truman committee ordered employ-ment reduced 10 per cent in Seattle shippards and reported that aircraft plant demands for workers in Dallas, Texas, were unjustified.

The armed services, in the showdown, feel their present demands for manpower to be subtracted from civilian ranks are

They exlain that shifts of manpower inside the services are due to difficulty with draft quotas curtaling certain desirable activities because the right type of men could not be obtained. They admit that air force loses have been less than expected and explain the growing importance of strong ground combat forces. War, they explain, is not something that can be adjusted to a man's ability, like factory work. It is a task for the physically fit. If all young men under 26 could be put into uniform and trained immediately, there still would be a shortage as far as military efficiency is concerned.

Moving Pictures Celebrating Fiftieth Anniversary.

This is a figent of an article in Motion Picture Letter, issued by the public information committee of the motion picture industry, reviewing the development of Thomas A. Edison's kinetoscope — a phonograph for the eye—now in use for half a century. The atticle was compiled by Terry Runsave, editor of Motion Picture Herald.

IN APRIL of 1944 and the 50th anniversary of the dawn of the motion picture as public entertainment, it is interesting to recall that most curiously the motion picture camera was invented and completed as a working instrument before there was any film to use in it.

phonograph was an Edison invention, too. The motion picture work went on in the secrecy of Room Five at his West Orange laboratories, and by mid-year of 1889 a mechanism had been Chinese-Japanese war. Grover evolved. It required a flexible Cleveland was president, Mugmedlum to carry the picture mak-wumps were deserting the Deming material over a set of sprock-ets and past the lens of the cam-anticipating a landslide in the era, and also of the viewing or next election. Coxey's Army of exhibition machine that was to come. First efforts included strips of pictures on stiff sheets of celluloid, and attempts to make a picture tape of collodion varnish dried in sheets on plate glass. The celluloid was too clumsy, the varnish too fragile.

Late that summer Mr. Edison had word that up in Rochester George Eastman had evolved a tough flexible material to meet the "roller photography" requirements of his "Kodak." A sample, about one inch wide and 50 feet long, was obtained from Roches-It was the stuff that the motion picture machine was wast-

BOTH Mr. Edison and Mr. Eastman were to add importantly to fame and fortune from the nappenings of that day, Oct. 6,

It was not, however, to start with a rush. Mr. Edison had a lot of other matters, considerably more pressing, on his mind. It was not until he'started to make a set of machines for exhibition along with phonographs at the World's Fair in '92. The fair was a year late but the picture machines were later, so it came that when they were ready it was the spring of '94. Hence the opening 50 years ago, on April 14, 1894, at 1155 Broadway, New York. Meanwhile Edison, the inventor of the motion picture, and Eastman, the father of the film, had not met. Amazingly down the years through which the motion picture was growing up into worldwide industry they still had no contact. They were busy. Thirty-one years after that

Broadway opening, on Feb. 15, 1925, the organized motion picture industry gave a great lunchcon function in Edison's honor at the Ritz Carlton hotel in New York. As the luncheon functionaries and guests were arriving, Mr. Edison and Mr. Eastman came in and reached the coat room simultaneously. There was no sign of recognition between them. A mutual friend and observer noted this and then and there they were in-Harding, Carl J. Watrous was elected vice president, J. W. Cone of Delaware, secretary, and An-

"Was it any good?" Edison demanded.

"It will still work - but we don't use it now."

THE wizard of Menlo Park, who had said to the incandescent lamp "Let there be light" said to speciators peering into his kineto-scope peephole machines the first 10 moving pictures. Built Around Popular

Showing now through Thursday at the Ohio theater is "Shine On Harvest Moon," with Ann Sheridan and Dennis Morgan. Patterned on the life of Nora Bayes and Jack Norworth, the story depicts the early days of vaudeville. Miss Sheridan plays the part of a young torch singer in a Milwaukee cafe. Her climb to success begins when she "puts over" a song written by a wellknown song writer and vaude-villian, He is instrumental in taking her out of the cafe and putting her into vaudeville.

"The Song of Bernadette" will be shown seven days starting Friday, with Jennifer Jones as Bernadette, the role which won her the coveted Oscar. An impoverished young peasant giri. Bernadette Soubirous, sees a vision of a "Beautiful Lady" in a grotto near her home in Lourdes, France. So strong is her belief in the vision that crowds follow her on her next visits to the grotto. Then comes the first miracle—she bathes a dying baby in the water of the spring at the grotto and the baby lives.

Bernadette is taunted by high officials. She is questioned in court. Her simple sincerity disarms her questioners. The mayor, hoping to turn the spring into a profitable enterprise, orders the grotto closed. A drink of the water cures the seriously ill son of Louis Napoleon and the Emperor
